

Guarding Against Employee Theft, Misuse, and Disclosure of Confidential, Proprietary and Trade Secret Information

Seminar

November 17, 2009 | 12:00 - 1:30 p.m.

Garvey Schubert Barer, Seattle, WA

The protection of confidential and proprietary business information has become an increasingly high priority. Yet, we are also in an age of professional mobility, where employees frequently switch jobs and periodically transition to direct competitors of their former companies. Employers find themselves at an increasing risk of losing their valuable confidential business information through employee defection.

This seminar gives employers the tools necessary to best guard against employee misuse, disclosure, and raiding of confidential business information.

Understand circumstances in which business protection, non-competition, non-disclosure, and/or non-solicitation agreements are warranted.

Learn tips for structuring and drafting such agreements.

Avoid common mistakes in securing and enforcing these agreements under ever-evolving Washington law.

Protect your company by understanding pre-litigation and litigation tactics.

Who should attend

In-house counsel, business owners, executives, human resource professionals, benefits coordinators and anyone with day-to-day workplace management responsibility.
