Becoming an Associate at Foster Garvey

Foster Garvey is always looking for bright, capable and motivated attorneys who want a career at a special kind of law firm. As an associate at our firm, you will work with talented, innovative attorneys in an environment dedicated to the long-term professional growth of all our people. Thanks to our size, culture and client base, we can offer associates immediate opportunities to do meaningful work and provide direct client service.

We are small enough that we usually have only one or two associates working with principals on a client's matter. Consequently, as a first- and second-year associate, you will deal directly with clients. This might involve negotiating contracts or taking responsibility for part of a major transaction, creating estate plans, deposing witnesses, drafting critical motions and sometimes even second chairing a trial. As you continue to grow your skills, you will be given more responsibility. In fact, many senior associates take leading roles in providing client service.

But, we also are large enough to attract top-notch clients. You can expect to serve a variety of national and international businesses, including Fortune 500 and middle-market companies, as well a broad range of privately held businesses. Our clients present us with challenging legal issues that require us to develop innovative solutions to real-world problems. They afford us an opportunity to work on a range of complex matters including multimillion dollar transactions, large Superfund projects, international matters, difficult intellectual property problems and high-profile lawsuits.

You also will be encouraged, and have opportunities, to work on public service matters. For example, the firm has litigated, on a pro bono basis, large game-changing cases that protect the rights of some of society's most vulnerable people. Many associates, with the full support of the firm, provide direct services to indigent clients and nonprofit organizations.

Providing meaningful work and real-life experience early in your career is one way we help you grow your legal skills and reach your professional goals. Another way is through effective mentoring and professional development programs.

We hire associates we believe have the potential to one day become leaders at Foster Garvey. This approach benefits both our associates and our firm. A large percentage of our principals were once associates at the firm and now practice in all areas of the law. Many hold leadership positions in the firm, serving as practice group chairs, office managing directors and members of the Executive Committee. In short, Foster Garvey is a law firm where a talented new associate can build a lasting, fulfilling legal career.
