

Framed a successful constitutional challenge under 28 U.S.C. 1983 to the reciprocal revocation of our client's professional license

Framed a successful constitutional challenge under 28 U.S.C. 1983 to the reciprocal revocation of our client's professional license, restoring operations and $15 million in annual revenue to client's business. Our client's license had been suspended in Canada before hearings had been held – a procedure that would not have been permissible in the United States. We successfully argued that granting reciprocal suspensions in the United States, based on a foreign process incompatible with domestic notions of due process, was unconstitutional.
