The Regulatory Chaos of Cannabis Drinks Retail

03.24.25 SevenFifty Daily

The booming market for hemp-derived THC-infused beverages is facing increasing regulatory uncertainty. While consumer demand for these drinks continues to grow, the absence of federal oversight has left states to chart their own courses – resulting in a confusing and often contradictory patchwork of laws for businesses to follow.

Brian A. Fink examines the legal and operational challenges surrounding cannabis-infused beverages. From shifting rules in states like Massachusetts and Texas to more structured policies in Minnesota, the article highlights how varied state-level approaches impact retailers, distributors and manufacturers across the country. Brian also addresses ongoing advocacy efforts aimed at establishing consistent federal guidelines, which many believe are essential for the long-term stability of this emerging category.

For a deeper look into how evolving regulations are shaping the future of THC beverages, continue reading Brian's article on the SevenFifty Daily website.
